

NATURE Does walking help your mental health? Every doctor will tell you, outside is where need moments of calmin my life

Julia Bradbury reveals the roots of her passion for walking and the challenge that nearly beat her ocal parks and green spaces were our saviours in lockdown, and seasoned walker Julia Bradbury invites us to pick up the pace and explore five terrific trails from her childhood. In a series of online films, the TV presenter urges viewers to spend summer in her hometown of Sheffield, 'The Outdoor City' in the Peak District where her father Michael instilled her love of walking. Tinsley Canal, Porter Valley and Redmires Reservoir are just some of the beauty spots she ventures out to on the city's doorstep. "Dad introduced me to my life-long friend, therapist and workout buddy - nature," says Julia. "Sheffield is 61% green space. We must learn to let nature into our lives."

Julia, who's 51 today (happy birthday!), lives in London with husband Gerard Cunningham and their three children Zephyrus, nine, and six-year-old twins, Xanthe and Zena.

Tell us about your first memorable walk with your dad...

I was about seven, at Stanage Edge, a dramatic moorland in the Peak District with imposing gray rock as its backdrop. I held Dad's hand, feeling awestruck it might as well have been Everest. A breathtaking landscape reminds me of how small I am in the world.

Do you have a favourite walk together?

Dad is 80 and his knees have gone, so he can't reach the tops of hills and mountains. but we love a river section of Dovedale Walk in the Peak District. I'm sad we won't sit atop mountains together again.

Did you always love walking?

I was a willing participant in the beginning. Dad is an engaging fellow and would tell me stories to keep me entertained. By 15, it wasn't as enjoyable as Duran Duran and

Julia loves walking with her dad

Michael

getting drunk on Malibu and pineapple. But those early experiences stuck with me and I've come full circle.

> Do your children enjoy getting outside?

They're mad about nature. Their favourite day was having a leaf fight and rolling down hills in pouring October rain.

stack I had to free climb

I nearly weed myself!'

you need to be. It makes us sleep, think and communicate better, and keeps us happy. Hugging trees, looking up at leaves - I need those moments of calm in my life.

How many miles have you clocked up?

Someone worked out that on my walking TV series, I walked to New York and back. I easily walk 40 miles a week in all weathers. I just pick a cagoule to match the day. Unglamorous, but I'm comforted by rain on a coat hood.

What makes the UK so special for walks?

I've walked all over the world, but big countries don't have what we do: a massive diversity of landscapes, with ancient > woodland, lochs, beaches and big mountains all within easy reach. And we're never more than 70 miles from the sea.

Why is Sheffield so special to explore?

These walks will show you the variety of Sheffield's green spaces and its heritage. They're all achievable, so set yourself a challenge and learn about a new place you've never been to before. My favourite is the Porter

Brook walk - a peaceful stream surrounded by woodland, which ends in Endcliffe Park, where I spent my teens.

Castle Crag in the Lake District is a charming, three-hour walk with a magical, otherworldly summit. It looks a bit like Lord Of The Rings up there. It's a brilliant came into view.

What's the most unexpected thing you've come across during a walk?

Years ago, I did a documentary called Ultimate Rock Climb. After 12 weeks, my final challenge was to free climb a sea stack in Sutherland called the Old Man of Stoer. As it came into view, I nearly weed myself. It's 60m high, with water swirling all around it. I did it, and I never will again!

Julia Bradbury is urging people to get back to nature in a series of walks filmed by The Outdoor Guide in conjunction with Sheffield City Council's Outdoor City campaign. Learn more at: theoutdoorguide. co.uk/walks/walks-by-location/sheffield-walks walk for families, too.